THE SAGA OF WOODVILLE LANDING

By Randall D. Warden

By 1897 the Inn had been built, the log cabin, the Bailey's house, and the "Steppes" which is my house and which in the old days was entered by a long flight of steps from a path leading over from the Inn.

The present front was then the rear as there were no roads on our side of Woodville. The ice and cold storage plant which had rooms designed to keep meats, fruits, eggs, and vegetables was finished about the same time and the Wesley Sherman house which then stood on the site of the present Club tennis courts was built. The approach to the Bailey's house was across the same bridge which you cross now on your way to the Club. Yes - it is the same bridge today - only raised a little higher. It was built thirty-seven years ago.

The approach to the log cabin was also from a bridge that ran across the present road leading down to the beach from the Suffolk County Land Company's bluff opposite. It was a pretty, rustic bridge and led over to the pavilion and the Inn. It gradually rotted away and there being no longer need for it, they took it down.

The ice plant was built so that the people who bought property in Shoreham would be supplied with all the necessities which would make living easy. The Company employed a farmer to raise milk, eggs, and vegetables and established a horticulturist on the place who laid out forty acres of peach and apple orchards. This part of the Island grows the very finest peaches and over a thousand baskets (16 qts) were often sent to market by the Dickersons, who first grew peaches in this locality.

The Maples was occupied by the Dickerson family. The mother was a widow with nine children, but the oldest boys were old enough to work, and fields of lima beans and corn grew where the FitzGeralds, the Eddies, the Zenkies, and the Varians live. Continued on page 4.

LONG ISLAND'S CLIMATE

Actually only two places in the United States compare with Long Island in hours of sunshine, and they are both in the South and West; El Paso, Texas and Los Angeles, California. Records taken over a period of five years by Hal B. Fullerton, show that Long Island is strangely free of sudden and extreme changes of temperature, and that it has an extraordinary amount of sunshine.

Rainfall, which some might hold to be a drawback to Long Island, is one of its greatest boons. Precipitation here monthly averages about four inches and is distributed throughout every month of the year. July and August, as we well know, and apparently over weekends this year, have ample rainfall frequently running to five inches and above, while practically all mainland points suffer with droughts varying in fatality.

The uniformity of variation throughout the five years accounts for the wonderful plant growth on the island known to scientists over a century ago to be exceeded by no place on earth and equalled by only one spot in southern Japan. This fact brought the great naturalist Humboldt from Europe to the island, and its exceptionally great number of plant varieties kept him here eight years making his records and numerations.

The reasons why such extraordinary numbers of Long Islanders retain perfect health and unusual mental and physical ability, is in part due to the very even temperature averages, holding year after year at close to the same for each month in the year, with slight fluctuations in above or below the average in one month brought back to the average in the following months.

In farming history of three centuries, Long Island has earned a reputation for eveness of temperature, an unusually long growing season, freedom from disastrous winds or floods and for evenly distributed supply of moisture - all important requisites in the development of plant life.

INTERIM

The Beach is bleak at Shoreham, now;
The woods stand grey on slopes of brown;
North winds toss mingled spray and sand;
The bluffs lean back against the land;
The streets are still in Shoreham town.

The lights are faint in Shoreham, now;
The sun slants low, and soon goes down;
Wan shades stretch thin along the ground;
The shore rims pale a steel-blue Sound;
Few windows gleam in Shoreham town.

For Winter's come to Shoreham, now;
The oaks have cast their glowing crown;
The gardens waste, the birds have flown;
The cottage doors claim not their own,
- but Spring will quicken Shoreham town.

Edward F. Stevens.

—— CABARET NIGHT ——

Saturday, September 1st at 9:30 P. M.

The Shoreham Cabaret each year is one of the popular outstanding events of the season. This year it will be under the direction of Virginia Macy Spontowicz, better known as DeeDee. There will be exhibition dancing, novelty skits, and the entertainment will be followed by dancing to the tempting rhythm of the Vikings. Tickets - $1.00 per person. Children 50¢.

SUMMARY FOR 1934

Looking back. The Club has been fortunate this season in having so many generous men to help out with their time and money for the happiness of all. Julian A. Acosta, buying the amplifier; Edwin D. Belknap, the safty rope and corks; Arthur J. Sackett, the small float; Cary D. Waters, guaranteeing any money difference needed to bring the popular Viking Orchestra here - Then there was T. K. Elliott, Montgomery H. Lewis and Alfred W. Varian always contributing generously in any financial emergency for a desirable need.

Looking ahead, several members have suggested placing beaver board on the side walls up to the heights of the beams and then perhaps painting the beaver board (or equivalent material) a cheerful color. The beams could be stained to take off the rawness. In producing plays and entertainments some needed changes and improvements are desirable for lighting effects and switches. None of these things will cost very much.

SHOREHAM FOLLIES FOR 1934

The Club as a whole wishes to congratulate Mary Ida Cross for the fine entertainment it gave this year. The only regret is that Mary Ida was kept too busy to do a dancing act herself- Virginia Macy Spontowicz also contributed much in the beautiful posters she did and the designing and making of the dresses worn by the chorus. Mr. De Witt Bailey as Master of Ceremonies was as interesting as ever in his sparkling introductions.

Fifteen Years in Shoreham

THE SAGA OF WOODVILLE LANDING (con'd)

There was an old apple orchard with sixty or seventy trees growing up the hill by the Waters and Belknaps and extending clear through to the beach in back of the Hapgoods. The property now occupied by Mr. Kavanaugh had an old house on it that had not been lived in for years. Father wrote his old classmate, Dr. William Herdman, professor of Mental Diseases in the Medical School of the University of Michigan, and told him to come and bring his family and spend the summer with us. When the Doctor arrived nothing would do but that he must buy the little old house with the cook house just outside the door. Here, he and his family spent their summers until after the death of my father. My father and Will Herdman had graduated from the University of Michigan in 1871 and had been lifelong friends. They had made plans to retire in their old age and live out their last days in Wardencliffe.

About 1896, the railroad was extended from Port Jefferson to Wading River, and the little square house that now stands on the southeast corner of the Maples property was erected for the village station. When R. R. Co. built their present station, the little box-like building in which Jim Robinson taught Sadie telegraphy and in which flowered our first Village romance, was moved to where it stands today. It occupied in its days of service a platform on the northern side of the tracks, halfway between Woodville Road and the present Shoreham Station. Nikola Tesla was instrumental in bringing us this new station. One of his stipulations was that if he located in Wardencliffe, the Long Island R. R. must build a station opposite his laboratories.

There were great bluffs that hid Woodville from the water in the days when I first came here. Those sand dunes later were all graded off, making the present plateaus which you see on either side of Woodville Road. These hills were up at least 200 feet so that if you wonder why at low tide the water is so shallow, you may know that it is because thousands of cubic yards of sand have been washed from these banks into the Sound.

Those of you who have seen old pictures of Shoreham know that at one time you could see the water from almost any point in the village, but in the years that have passed almost everyone has felt obliged to set out trees and shrubs so that now the views have been cut off. We have lost something, but we have gained something too, and the delightful sylvan beauty of Shoreham is one of her most engaging charms.

I read in the "Scribe" the other day that forty feet of our front had washed away in the last twenty-five years. It brought to mind the pavilion and bath houses which once stood on a plateau just across the road from the present club house. There was a big dancing floor 40 feet square and in the days when the Shoreham Inn was gay and prosperous, the elite spent many happy hours either tripping the light fantastic or quietly gossipping in its comfortable rockers. Underneath the observation floor were 16 bath houses where the gay flapper of that day arrayed herself in a dashing costume of woolen bloomers and ample skirt for a dip in the sea, not forgetting a large straw hat securely tied under her chin lest she sunburn.

The story of our little village is one of industry frustrated again and again. The elder Dickerson killed himself by overwork in attempting to build up a business of shipping gravel and sand to the building trades in New York City. The scarcity of labor drove him to overwork himself in loading the vessels that carried the first consignments.

A dozen years later the Wardencliffe brick yards, after spending a great deal of money and manufacturing several hundred thousand brick, were obliged to give up because the clay lacked sufficient cohesiveness to be manufactured by machinery. Hand made the brick were superb, but money can not be made under such a slow process.

In the days when Sill's Gully was a busy brickyard and full of sheds and burning Kilns, it was an interesting place to visit especially at night when the glowing, red hot brick and the flames from the burning fires made the view out on the water a mysterious phantom world. The Inn, the ice plant, and the landing, Tesla's dream, the sand pits and the brick yard, even the farms are gone; yet today industry is raising its head again in hope of ultimate victory and the "Shoreham Scribe" puts out its ninth and tenth issues.

Before I close it is well that we pause and reflect a moment and perhaps stand silently while a roll call is made of our Shoreham friends who have passed on. Many you did not know, but to those of us who remember it will be a little token of respect to those who belonged to the past.

Richard D. Upham, successor to the interests of his father, Dr. Jabez Upham. He had an important part in laying out the Shoreham water system, and in building the roads and beautiful homes on the estate of the Suffolk County Land Company.

Elizabeth Cady Stanton, the Woman Suffrage Leader, her daughter and son, Mrs. Margaret Stanton Lawrence and Robert Stanton who once owned the Bailey cottage.

Theodore Blatch, son-in-law of Mrs. Stanton whose daughter, Mrs. Lee DeForest, built the Hughes house. Mr. Blatch accidently lost his life in Shoreham through touching a fallen live wire.

Dean Thomas Balliet of Columbia University who owned and occupied the log cabin for many years.

S. H. Millard of whose beautiful home on the bluff there remains nothing but the ruins of the chimney.

Robert Rumler, the original owner of Monty Lewis' house, who put up the first flag pole in Shoreham.

Herman Hasenbalg who lived opposite the Acosta home.

Dr. Emil Frei, a distinguished physician and the father of Herbert, Gilbert and Marie.

James L. Clark who first owned the Sackett place.

Herbert Hapgood who developed and built most of our present Shoreham.

Frank Gridley, a true friend, who supervised the building of the present club and whose tennis court was a rallying place every week-end.

William J. Thompson, civic leader, and village president; always a Shoreham enthusiast.

Charles Tagliabue, also a village president who contributed generously both of time and money in the early development of the village.

LeRoy Scott, the writer, who was Shoreham most daring swimmer.

William Ashley, who owned the beautiful estate on Brier Cliff Road.

Father Martell, at one time the owner of the DuCret place.

William Rudolph, one of the old guard whose family still live in Shoreham.

Dr. E. T. Sturgis, whose home among the trees was a bird sanctuary.

Benjamin Smythe, whose sudden death was a shock to the community.

Judge FitzGerald, who for many years was chief magistrate of the court in the village and raconteur par excellence.

John Clements, familiarly known as John Bellport, whose faithful service for forty years helped every phase of the development of Shoreham.

John Melville, pessimistic and loquacious chief realtor and village clerk for twenty years.

Mrs. Frances Upham Warden, whose circle of acquaintances was country-wide and who was the friend of everybody.

Dr. David Sherman who was always a loyal contributor to our village activities and a generous sympathetic friend.

H. Miles Zabriskie, one of the old guard who was many years a Shoreham resident and occupied the property now owned by Frederick Zenke.

Norman Zeno, music lover and the soul of hospitality. He was never so happy as when surrounded by friends.

And so they go-my friends and yours,
On a long voyage with no chart of their direction.
But oft in memory-crowded midnight hours,
I see again their dim reflection.
And so I close the Roster-
Our departed Village friends
Who have drifted on, to gather
Where the Western sunset ends.
I have called the roll in answer
To the memory of the past,
Confident that you'll remember
Men of Shoreham to the last.
